The Peudleton Affair.

A correspondent of the Washington Capital says: "Mr. Pendleton spent no money in get nog that claim through, because he was not called on to do so. He is among women one of the most fascinating of men. N.w. it so happened that he could aid himself and his case in this way and was called upon to use no

"You must know that Mrs. Belknap, then Mrs. Bower, was for some time a boarder at the Burnett House in Cincionati and extremely intimate with Mrs. Marsh. These ladies, although highly respected, were not consider ed good society in our swinish city of swine. Mrs. Pendleton, who was a Key-Star Spang led Banner Key, you know-was not on visiting terms with Mrs. Bower nor Mrs. Marsh. The two last named felt this deeply. If there is any one thing more precious to the female mind than dress it is good society.

"But Bower was killed, and Mrs. B. joined her sister, wife of the Secretary, in Washing ton, and the gay and sprightly Marsh wended her way to New York city. New about this time Gentlemen George appeared in Washington preferring the claim of the Kentucky Central. Bless your soul, he was not called to pay any money-not be. A few short speeches, a few winning smiles, followed by an invitation to join his family, then in Europe, did the business. George smiled on the fair Bowers, and she softened. The fair Bower smiled on the Secretary, and he softened. The Secretary miled on his subordinates, and they all soften ed, and in a few days G. G., with $90,000 in his pocket, escerted the fair Bower to New York, where she became the guest of the Marsh, and G. G., hving at the New York ho tel, drove the Bower and the Marsh through Central Park every afternoon, and every night at the Opera or the theatre the three graces could be seen; and after, at Delmonico's, a delicate supper of lobster salad and champagne terminated the pleasures of the day.

"le due course of time, on a Cunarder, the three took passage for Europe, and on the voythree took passage for Europe, and on the voy-age Gentleman G. was as gallant to the two For Pittsburg and the West, 6 a. m. daily, with fur ladies as he was in duty bound to be as their escort. Mrs. Marsh had experience on the briny deep and so escaped seasickness; but the fair Bower had to be waited on and supported every hour of the day, until the Irish channel was reached, and then in smooth wa ters the fair Bower bloomed.

"Gentleman B. was so true to his charge that he lingered in London, driving in the park and visiting the opera, as in New York, until Mrs. P., daughter of the Star Spangled Banner, heard of the devotion and ordered tientleman G. to join her on the contineut, which, as a devoted husband, he was bound

"It is said that some serious consequences were threatened, but I have always regarded them as unfounded rumore.

"The rest of this little romance is somewhat sad. The two ladies, who were female Damon and l'ythias of their day, fell out. They dis sgreed with each other. Each charged the other with imprudent conduct; and as Mrs. Bower became Mrs. Belknap, wife of a Secretary of the Cabinet, she had rather the advantage in social status, and so the fair Marsh sought to pull her down-and down she came. "but don't you see in all this how ridiculous it is to suppose that G. G. was called on to ex pend any money, when his soft, persuasive tongue, and tender, loving eyes, bandsome person and high position could win the way

WASHINGTON'S PORTRAIT. - In this centenmai season the great brain of the public will be interested in the fact that at the Masonic lodge in Alexandria, Va., there is a portrait of President Washington painted two years before his death, and judged to be an admirable likeness of him at that time. Its effect is painful, inasidea one has conceived of his facial expression, representing the first President as being infititely less imposing in appearance than posterity is pleased to regard him. There is, however, in the ware-rooms of our friend Mr. Barlow a picture of Washington painted by an eminent English artist four years before the revolutionary army was commanded by him, which, by comparison with Gilbert Stewart's steat pertrait, is presumed to be a first-class ikeness and shows him to be as handsome and characteristically distinguished as the most en thusiastic could desire. Washington was about only years of age at the date of this picture, and it was painted before a bungling set of a se teeth had disarranged the original shape of his mouth. There is no man in America who has had a larger—and few as large—an Experience in portraits as Mr. Barlow, and he "gards this as a true counterfeit of the great irginian's face; so we suppose that in the dexandria lodge is scarcely a correct representation. - Wash.
